The introduction of the first Printing Press into this country was due mainly to the Enterprise, Liberality and Zeal of the Rev. Jesse Glover, a non-conformist minister of England, who left his country to settle among his friends in Massachusetts, where he might enjoy the freedom of opinion not allowed under the home government. He was a man of some wealth, and engaged earnestly in the settlement of Massachusetts. Mr. Glover gave to Harvard College a Font of Printing Type, and £700 was contributed by some gentlemen

SMALL PICA OLD STYLE.

IT is no mere poetical adage that "the proper study of mankind is man;" no study is more useful or more interesting. There are but few men, however, who will reward our toil; the shallow and thoughtless yield us as little as the barren heath. In order that we may learn from man, he must possess some element of greatness; he must be a thinker before he can teach us to think. In proportion as he possesses thoughts and has the faculty to communicate them, he exercises an influence upon us for good or evil according to the nature of those thoughts. Fortunately it is but rarely the higher class of minds attempt to inculcate evil; men of true genius generally encourage virtue, even when their own practices are vicious.

In order to appreciate this to its full extent, it is necessary to bear in mind that the greatest thinkers are frequently guilty of the gravest errors; and that there is scarcely one of the most illustrious benefactors of mankind whose character would prove entirely faultless on a close examination. It is only the thoughtless, therefore, who expect any one to be perfect; men of sense admire and value what is good, and attribute evil which accompanies it to human frailty. Those who pursue the opposite course do justice to none; nor are any more ready to pass a severe judgment on the errors of others than those who commit the gravest errors themselves.

These thoughts have been suggested to us by an examination of the life and writings of SENECA, the Roman philosopher and moralist, than whom none among the illustrious dead has been more rudely assailed by a certain class of modern writers. That the tutor of NERO was guilty of serious errors far be it from us to deny. We have no intention of eulogizing his moral character; nor shall we seek to justify a single fault that may be regarded as proved against him. Our main object, in the present article, is to show that, assuming the worst accusations made against SENECA, by his enemies, to be true, the good he has done by his writings not only entitles him to acquittal at the hands of posterity, but also to a high rank among the instructors of mankind.

There is no period in the life of LUCIUS ANNÆUS SENECA which does not possess a peculiar interest; born in the second or third year of the Christian era, there are few heroes of romance whose story is more chequered. Both his paternal and maternal ancestors were distinguished for superior intellect and intelligence. His father, MARCUS ANNÆUS, as well as himself, was a native of Corduba, in Spain. The former took no part in politics. Belonging, as he did, to the equestrian order, and pos-

The Science of Evidence, both in Law and in all other Departments of Inquiry where we have to do with mere Probabilities, is late in springing up, and long in being brought to Perfection. The Science of Mathematical Demonstration, where there is little Complexity and no Uncertainty, may be early Cultivated and Perfected; but not so that of the Evidence either of Human Testimony or of any Description of what we may call merely Indicative Facts. The Ancient Greeks and Romans, with their Cultivation, seem to have had no distinct Notions on the Subject of Evidence in any Department either in Physical or Moral Inquiry. They Philosophied, indeed, Eloquently and Ingeniously both in Morals and in Physics, but just as

Moral Philosophy, or the Science of Human Nature, may be treated after two Different Manners; each of which has its Peculiar Merit, and may contribute to the Entertainment, Instruction, or Reformation of Mankind. The one considers Man chiefly as Born for Action; and, as influenced in his actions by Taste and Senti=ment, pursuing Objects according to the Value which these objects seem to possess, and also the Light in which they present themselves. Philosophers of this sort Picture to the Imagination Virtue as the most Valuable and Lovely of all Objects; and, accordingly, borrowing from Poetry and Eloquence the Peculiar Enchant=

The practice of introducing Ornaments, Drawings, Emblematic Figures, and even Portraits into Manuscripts, is of great antiquity. Varro wrote the lives of seven hundred illustrious Romans, which he enriched with their Portraits, as Pliny attests in his Natural History. Pomponius Atticus, the friend of Cicero, was the author of a work on the actions of the great men among the Romans, which he ornamented with their Por-

PICA CALEDONIAN. — 30 a 20 A, 5½ lbs.

It is hardly necessary to call the attention of an Ordinary Observer to the large amount of Printing constantly being executed in the United States. This fact forces itself upon his mind at every turn of his daily walks, and when he is told that there are annually struck off, through all the various
